RUBRIC FOR SAFETY-NET GRANTS

1. Overall, does this program clearly address the Basic Needs it plans to meet?

Strong – The application clearly explains the how and why they chose the Basic Needs that they are addressing. It is obvious that the applicant has become familiar with the Community Needs Assessment and has used that data and other data to support the need for their program in their community. The program has collaborative partners who are involved in the overall success and delivery of the program, or they have a clear explanation of why there are no collaborative partners.

Average - The application explains the Basic Needs that they are addressing. There is statistical data to support the need for the program, but the need either isn't clearly defined or connected to the Community Needs Assessment. They have some collaborative partners, or they have explained why no partners exist.

Weak - The application does not clearly explain how or why they chose the Basic Needs that they are addressing. The statistical data is either missing, does not support the need for the program, or the program does not adequately meet the need they identify. There are no collaborative partners and does not adequately explain why.

2. Do the Measurements align with the Basic Needs the program is designed to address?

Strong – The Measurements clearly align with the Program Objectives and seem logical, attainable and in line with their request.

Average – The Measurements align with the Program Objectives.

Weak – The Measurements do not clearly align with the Program Objectives do not seem logical, attainable and in line with their request.

3. Is the Target Audience clearly described, reflect the demographics of the community in which they work, and address an audience mentioned in the Community Needs Assessment (if applicable)?

Note: If the clients are not in the United Way service area, the program is not eligible.

Strong – The Target Audience is very clear. They are in the United Way service area, there is good supporting data, and the program is able to show that they will be able to collect demographic data. The Participants section gives a good sense of who this program will serve, why they are being served, and the challenges they are experiencing Average – The Target Audience is stated. They are in the United Way service area, there is supporting data, and the program should be able to collect demographic data. The Participants section explains who this program will serve and why they are being served.

Weak – The Target Audience is mentioned. They are in the United Way service area, there is either no supporting data or the data is insufficient. It is unclear if the program will be able to collect demographic data. The Participants section does not clearly explain who this program will serve or why they are being served.

4. Does the Program Budget and budget narrative make sense? Is it accurate and logical? Does United Way's contribution have a tangible and clear impact on service delivery?

Strong – The budget is well thought out and accurate. All sources of income are listed, and all expenses seem reasonable. United Way funds play an important role in the delivery of the program so that we can ensure our funding has an impact. The Budget Narrative clearly explains how the program would be affected if the full funding amount is not awarded and changes to potential outcomes and service delivery are addressed. If this is a new program, United Way funds are the catalyst for the program. If this is an expansion of services, United Way funds are critical to that expansion.

Average – The budget is accurate. All sources of income are listed, and all expenses seem reasonable. United Way funds play a role in the impact the program will have. The Budget Narrative explains how the program would be affected if the full funding amount is not awarded and changes to potential outcomes are addressed. It is clear how funds will be used.

Weak – The budget has errors and/or missing information. Sources of income are not clearly listed and/or expenses do not seem reasonable. It is not obvious how United Way funds play a role in the impact the program will have. The Budget Narrative does not fully explain how the program would be affected if the full funding amount is not awarded. It may or may not be clear how funds will be used.

Weak – The Target Audience is mentioned. They are in the United Way service area, there is either no supporting data or the data is insufficient. It is unclear if the program will be able to collect demographic data. The Participants section does not clearly explain who this program will serve or why they are being served.

4. Does the Program Budget and budget narrative make sense? Is it accurate and logical? Does United Way's contribution have a tangible and clear impact on service delivery?

Strong – The budget is well thought out and accurate. All sources of income are listed, and all expenses seem reasonable. United Way funds play an important role in the delivery of the program so that we can ensure our funding has an impact. The Budget Narrative clearly explains how the program would be affected if the full funding amount is not awarded and changes to potential outcomes and service delivery are addressed. If this is a new program, United Way funds are the catalyst for the program. If this is an expansion of services, United Way funds are critical to that expansion.

Average – The budget is accurate. All sources of income are listed, and all expenses seem reasonable. United Way funds play a role in the impact the program will have. The Budget Narrative explains how the program would be affected if the full funding amount is not awarded and changes to potential outcomes are addressed. It is clear how funds will be used.

Weak – The budget has errors and/or missing information. Sources of income are not clearly listed and/or expenses do not seem reasonable. It is not obvious how United Way funds play a role in the impact the program will have. The Budget Narrative does not fully explain how the program would be affected if the full funding amount is not awarded. It may or may not be clear how funds will be used.

APPENDIX I – Letter of Intent Review Guidelines

UWRC GRANT REVIEW CONSIDERATIONS – Letters of Intent

Letters of Intent (LOI) – For Impact Grants, these are brief program descriptions that outline how the program aims to use a Strategy for Change to work toward a community goal. Safety-net Grant LOIs state how a program will provide one of the approved services.

What to consider:

- Does it address a Strategy for Change and seem able to produce the required measures? (IMPACT GRANTS)
- Does it address findings in the Community Needs Assessment?
- Does the budget seem reasonable? Looking at the number of people it is proposed to serve (outputs) and the services provided?
- Is it fundable? - serving people in our service area – clearly addresses one of our focus areas – allowable program activity
- Safety-net grants should provide a service to meet a basic need for people in our service area – Is it meeting an unmet need or expanding access or continuing a tradition of meeting needs?

Once you have read the LOIs, you will state whether or not a program should move to the application phase and leave feedback for the program. The feedback is VERY important (and required) and will be given to the applicant.

Feedback on LOIs should:

- Let the writer know what they have done well and praise good work
- Tell the writer what more information you want to see in the application that will help you become more informed
- Ask questions that the application should answer
- Let the writer know very clearly why you don't think that the program should apply – give clear examples and offer ideas for improvement

The full Community Impact Council will review all of the feedback and suggestions before they make their final decisions.

APPENDIX III – Grant Writing Advice Article

Tips to Strengthen Your Grant Budget By Leah Holt November 13th, 2018

What is a grant budget?

To be sure we're on the same page, the "grant budget" is NOT your organizational budget. The purpose of the grant budget is to:

- Detail the costs of the program or project you're proposing.
- Show the funder exactly what their money will pay for.
- List other sources of income for costs not covered by the grant being requested.

Ok, now that we're clear about what it is, let's look at how you create it.

Create a grant budget

Include Both Expenses and Revenue – Your grant budget should contain two sections: one that outlines your expenses and the other that shows your revenue (i.e. where the money will come from to pay for your program or project and how much each revenue source will generate). I think we can all agree on why funders want to see the expenses...because they want to know how much your program or project will cost. But why do they care about where the other money will come from to pay for things?

Funders like knowing you're not solely relying on their grant. They value investing in programs and projects that bring other resources to the table – like other grants, donations, and even volunteer service. Plus, showing them that you have secured some or most of the needed funds gives your program or project credibility because this means there are other people or organizations willing to invest in your nonprofit.

Revenue

By the way, funders providing you with their own budget tool don't use the same one as the next funder. Every single funder is different. Sometimes, they only want to see the expenses. Sometimes, they may ask for both expenses and revenue. When you're prepared with both, it's easy to give each funder what they want.

Categorize your costs in a way that makes sense – There's no rule that says how many lines or how few lines you need in a budget when you create it yourself. Your goal is to illustrate to the funder what it takes to successfully operate your program or complete your project.

As you're thinking through all of this, try grouping items into broad categories like Salary/Wages, Travel, Equipment, Materials and Supplies, etc. Then, assign dollar amounts to these – being sure to provide descriptions of how you arrived at your dollar amounts.

Before you know it, you're on your way to creating a well-thought out, detailed budget that tells a story.

Speaking of telling a story....

Make sure costs tie in with your narratives – Someone should be able to look at your budget and understand what you're proposing to do, even if they haven't read your program or project description yet.

Unfortunately, a couple of the biggest mistakes people make when putting together a budget is leaving out things they discussed in their narratives and not making their budget match what they proposed in their narratives.

Here's a tip to avoid doing that. Once you've pulled together your budget, take a step back and ask yourself, "Does this budget tell the same story as my narratives?" In other words, do the words and numbers match? To check, read through your narratives. Every time you mention something that costs money, stop and double-check that it's in your budget.

Use real numbers – It's critical that you base your budgeted expenses on the true costs of things. Please don't pull numbers out of thin air!

Of course, getting dollar amounts for employee or mileage costs should be easy because your nonprofit should have that information or be able to project it. When it comes to other costs – like materials and supplies, for instance – you'll need to do your research and find these on your own. A few good places to do this are:

- Stores – Need to buy 10 shovels for a project? Check out your local hardware retailer and see what their price is for the ones you want to buy.
- Online pricing – With technology at our fingertips, jumping online and finding a price can be really fast...just don't forget shipping costs, if they apply. You'll need to include these in your budgeted cost.
- Quotes from vendors – Maybe you're replacing some flooring in an animal shelter or excavating some property to install a community garden. Getting a quote for what you need, especially when it's a specialty project or service, takes the guesswork out of how much it'll cost.

Make sure your numbers add up – This one seems obvious, right? But I can't tell you how many times I've reviewed grant budgets and the costs simply didn't add up to the total grant amount being sought out, total of costs in a category, or total program or project budget amount listed. And you better believe funders whip out their calculators and check your math!

If you're using a funder's form, do yourself a favor and triple check your numbers. It only takes a minute and can be the difference in getting a grant or not.

Oh, and even if you use a formula in Excel, get your calculator out to manually check the numbers. I've seen too many Excel sheets where the formula didn't include all necessary cells, throwing the total off.

Not a numbers person? That's ok. Have someone else look at your budget and ask them to make sure your dollar amounts add up correctly.

Show the funder what costs they're covering – It's a good idea to show the funder what costs their money will pay for. You can do this by simply adding a column in the expenses. In the example below, the funder can see that the grant being requested will pay for $400 in Materials and Supplies.

Sometimes funders may ask you to be more specific in the narratives about exactly what the grant is paying for. In this case, you can tell them how much of the grant is being used for mulch and how much is being used for plants.

Oh, and it goes without saying, ensure that the costs you're asking the funder to pay for are allowable. If a funder doesn't award grants for personnel costs, for instance, don't ask them for a grant to cover your Program Manager's salary.

Expenses – Funder Portion

Be realistic about the grant amount you're requesting – Usually, you can find out how much to apply for in a grant application by reading a funder's guidelines. Maybe there's a range – ask for no less than $500 but no more than $1,000. Or maybe there's a specific amount the funder wants to give away.

But what if there's no recommended amount? How do you know how much to apply for?

We recommend you look at their latest IRS Form 990 and see how much they gave to their grantees in that year. You'll probably see a trend or you can calculate the average amount. If you have access to Foundation Directory Online, the funder's profile lists their most common grant amount. Don't forget, you can always call the foundation and ask them what amount they recommend for a first-time applicant. In the end, make sure what you're asking for is reasonable.

The Bottom Line

With millions of grants being submitted every year, you can increase your chances of getting your share by including fully developed grant budgets that tell the story of your grant in numbers.
